Opinion: Increased risk?

Too much analysis can lead to paralysis. I prefer not to plan anything. You need to be flexible to cope with unforeseen events.

Planning is important but there's no need to overdo it.

Poor planning can be disastrous. It can lead to the wrong people working on the wrong task - so you don't play to your strengths. Everything feels disorganised, like you're in perpetual catch-up mode.

Time management techniques

- Prioritising your time

- The 80/20 rule

- Multi-tasking

- Just get it done!

- To-Do lists

- Preventing procrastination

- Pomodoro Technique®

Prioritising with the important/urgent matrix

- List all tasks

- Decide whether they are important or urgent

- Plot them on the matrix

- Use the labels to assign priorities

80/20 rule - The Pareto principle

- 80% of your most important work can be completed in 20% of the available time

- Unforeseen problems can cause difficulty and impact on your schedule

- Sometimes, the outstanding 20% of work can absorb 80% of your time

- Focus on the 80% first to improve productivity

Multi-tasking

"...the ability to undertake multiple tasks at the same time with competence..."

- Multi-tasking works for tasks that can be completed

  simultaneously

- But too much multi-tasking can be distracting, it can lead to paralysis and inertia

skillcast®

Just get it done!

- Get on with finishing what's been started

- Prioritises task completion

- Prevents build-up of incomplete activities

✓ Where you need to focus on accomplishment

✓ To Do lists can be refined by prioritising activities

You make the call: Advantage or disadvantage?

To do lists can stifle creativity, only what's on the list gets done

They give a feeling of control and achievement, motivating you

They help structure your thoughts and provide a sense of purpose

Don't

✖ Focus on activities or tasks that aren't important or urgent

✖ Be distracted by technology - e.g. email, social media, internet browsing

✖ Allow others to steal your time - plan and rehearse strategies for dealing with interruptions

✖ Waste time in meetings - only invite those who need to attend, consider holding stand-up meetings, set an agenda etc.
